Willmar Campus

About the Department

Take the first step to earn a bachelor's degree in agricultural education by earning your Agricultural Science and Technology AS Degree at Ridgewater!

Our program has three interconnected components:

- Classroom and lab instruction
- Experiential supervised learning outside of the classroom
- Leadership education through student organization involvement in the National FFA Organization, the National Young Farmer Education Association, National Professional Agricultural Student Organization and others

Ridgewater College provides the first two years of agricultural education on the Willmar campus. By following the curriculum and working with your advisor, you can transfer your Ridgewater College credits toward a university bachelor's degree.

Program Distinctions

- Strong industry partnerships
- Networking opportunities with other agriculture educators
- Minnesota's largest two-year agriculture program
- State-of-the-art equipment, facilities and hands-on school farm
- Experience helping faculty host FFA contests
- Connections with other students and industry reps in Professional Agriculture Students (PAS) club
- Many Ridgewater graduates now teach in Minnesota

Career Info

When you build upon your Agricultural Science and Technology academic foundation with a bachelor's degree, you'll have a bright future educating students at the middle school, high school and adult levels. You will also be prepared to provide guidance in Future Farmers of America (FFA).

Nationwide, there is a severe shortage of agricultural educators.

This major also provides excellent preparation for careers in agri-business sales and management, where agriculture knowledge, combined with communication and leadership skills, makes great candidates for industry jobs.
