Career Info

The employment market is competitive. Whether you seek a new job or professional development, you need skills to set you apart from the crowd. A Time magazine article cites the lack of communication and interpersonal skills as the real reason college graduates are not being hired.

According to Job Outlook, five of the top 10 skills and qualities employers seek are communication based: collaboration/teamwork, strong verbal communication, critical thinking, effective writing, and persuasion/influence capabilities.

According to the Workforce Readiness Consortium, very few entrants to the job market have the necessary communication skills employers seek. Only one in five job seekers has sufficient writing skills, fewer than half have effective verbal skills, and one-third are unable to work collaboratively.

Completing the Communication Studies Certificate from Ridgewater College shows a current or potential employer you have the essential skills for working effectively with co-workers, clients, and customers.
