Willmar Campus

About the Program

If you're seeking a rewarding career in agriculture, consider one of many careers in dairy. While some Dairy Management students plan to return to family dairy farms as partners or owner/operators, many work as assistant herds persons, herd managers, or health technicians. You could also help dairy farmers maximize milk production and cattle health by working in agri-businesses.

Whatever your goals, Ridgewater's Dairy Management program gives dairy farm owners and operators the tools to manage all aspects of your operation, not just the dairy enterprise. In addition, the program helps you if you choose to work in the dairy supply industry to provide dairy farm owners products and services that assist them in managing their operations.

You will take courses in everything from breeding and artificial insemination to dairy nutrition and cattle health. This comprehensive program covers all aspects of dairy management, including hoof trimming, ultrasound techniques, sire selection, facilities management, and heifer replacement.

Three primary emphasis areas give you options:

- Owner-operator
- Employed Manager
- Agri-business/Retail

Career Info

The dairy farmers of the 21st century must not only manage the dairy operation, but also address financial concerns and employee matters. Among the most sought-after agricultural professionals today are:

- Dairy assistant herd person
- Artificial inseminator technicians
- Equipment service technicians
- Health technicians
- Feed technicians

Our graduates have enjoyed a 100% job placement rate for several years.

Degrees and Certificates

Dairy Management
 AAS Degree - 72 credits
 Diploma - 72 credits

Program Distinctions

- Apply skills and gain experience during 4 paid internships
- Visit 40-plus dairy farms during the two years
